Chile protests: a fight against inequality

People in Chile are protesting intensely against the high cost of living in the Country. The protests began because of an increase in transportation prices. The population joined a strike, took signs to the streets, and some of them even burned vehicles and buildings.

On Tuesday, President Sebastián Piñera, a billionaire conservative who has been criticised for his response to the protests, promised to increase the basic pension by 20% and the minimum wage from $413 to $482 (£374). He also pledged tax rises on high-earners, a law that would see the state cover the costs of expensive medical treatment and the cancellation of a planned electricity rate hike.
